This lecture, focused on moral problems in the research-practice distinction and in oversight systems to protect patients, will cover the historical foundations of contemporary research ethics and the research-practice distinction, problems in the philosophical foundation of this model, and the variety of healthcare activities that would benefit from systematic moral evaluation in light of the conceptual bankruptcy of the distinction between research and practice.